Coffee houses, known as qahveh khaneh, began to emerge in Persia, becoming centers for social interaction, intellectual exchange, and cultural development.

The Rise of Coffee Houses

As coffee spread across the globe, particularly to Europe in the 17th century, it transformed into a symbol of socialization and enlightenment. Coffee houses became known as "penny universities," where patrons could engage in discussions about politics, philosophy, and art for the price of a cup of coffee. This phenomenon highlights how Coffee Culture served as a catalyst for social change and intellectual discourse.
